Regular Embroidery

Embroidery is the art of decorating fabric or other materials with needle and thread. Pretty much any custom artwork can be materialized by using artistic combination of thread colors, types, directions, as well as supplementary materials to create special effects.

Screen Printing

Screen printing involves creating a stencil (screen), and then using that stencil to apply layers of ink on the printing surface. Each color is applied using a different stencil, one at a time, combined to achieve the final look.

Screenprint Transfer

Heat transfer is the process of printing onto special transfer paper and using a heat press to transfer it onto a shirt. Much like the old iron-ons you could buy at craft stores, these transfers are kind of like stickers, meaning the image will lie on top of the shirt and has a different texture than the surrounding material. Unlike those old iron-ons, these are professional-quality transfers with vivid colors and durability similar to that of screenprint.

Heat Transfers can be applied to many clothing items, as well as novelty items such as mouse pads, puzzles, license plates, etc. The application is virtually unlimited! Depending on the type of transfer you choose, you can customize the softness, the vibrancy of color, the glossiness and the thickness of the background.

With hundreds of different transfer materials available for different applications and special effects, heat transfer is also one of the most versatile decoration methods.

DTG is a relatively new fabric printing method that allows any type of digital artwork to be printed directly from computers to shirts, with the use of special inks, print settings and shirt treatments. There is no design limitation for digital printing, which means you can print any design and color.

It offers more flexibility than screenprinting in terms of color replication and turn-around time (especially for smaller orders).
